Piedmont: Turin Province

Cradled between the Alpine foothills and the fertile Po plain, the cuisine of the Turin province reflects a rare balance of mountain heartiness and courtly refinement. Shaped by centuries as the seat of the House of Savoy, its dishes favor precision, rich butter and cream, slow-cooked meats, and elegant simplicity over excess. Rice from the lowlands, cattle from surrounding farms, alpine cheese, and prized hazelnuts define the table, while historic trade routes introduced anchovies, spices, and chocolate, now inseparable from local tradition. The result is a cuisine that is deeply seasonal, quietly luxurious, and rooted in both landscape and history.
